I liked this essay collection but didn't love it as a whole. There were a couple of essays that I felt didn't go anywhere or didn't go deep enough (ie: Installations -- this particular essay lacked focus imo). With that said, there are three essays that knocked my socks off: American Gray Space, No Country, and Americana/Dying of Thirst.

Some of Us Are Very Hungry Now by Andre Perry

These two essays nicely introduce and complete the perspectives developed in the middle three essays. Two of these works attack the abuse of statistics, either as a moral issue or as a coverup for incompetence. One criticizes the recently popular substitution of managers for leaders in military environments.

Three more essays turn to Wilsnack itself. Krzysztof Bracha situates Wilsnack's pilgrimage within wider debates over blood cult in the 1440s and 1450s, focusing on three treatises of James of Jüterborg, a Carthusian. At first, Bracha argues, James offered a measured, ambivalent assessment of the cult at Wilsnack.
