The EICO 625 is fairly unique in having its own 6H6 diode tube to rectify the 30V filament voltage. It provides DC for the neon short-indicator bulb. If the tube is suspected of having a short then there is a fairly comprehensive series of tests than can be administered to isolate shorted elements.

Eico 625 was quite a popular emission tester, and had a variation or two just to confuse me. A very early and quite popular emission tester from Eico was the Model 625.While it is a basic emission tester, the Model 625 is very compact and easy to use. The Model 625 is also one of the few (only?) Eico tube testers I know of that has a vacuum tube under the panel.
